

December 10, 2021

Senator Judy Ward
Chair, Senate Aging and Youth
Senate Box 203030
Harrisburg, PA 17120-3030

Senator Maria Collett
Minority Chair, Senate Aging and Youth
Senate Box 203012
Harrisburg, PA 17120-3012

RE: Opposition to H.B. 1737

Dear Chair Ward and Minority Chair Collett:

I write to you today to urge you to oppose H.B. 1737, "An Act amending Title 23 (Domestic Relations) of the Pennsylvania Consolidated Statutes, in child protective services, further providing for investigation of reports," for the following reasons.

First, H.B. 1737 will harm children, contrary to its intended purpose. At ParentalRights.org, we have seen how the application of many of our nation's child welfare laws have inadvertently led to harming children, by treating innocent and guilty families with the same broad brush.<sup>1</sup> H.B. 1737 will continue and extend this harm, by

---

<sup>1</sup> See, e.g., Josh Gupta-Kagan, Beyond Law Enforcement: Camreta v. Greene, Child Protection Investigations and the Need to Reform the Fourth Amendment Special Needs Doctrine, 87 Tul. L. Rev. 353, 357 (2012) ("[W]hen there is no law enforcement involvement (as occurs millions of times every year), the [Fourth Amendment's special needs] doctrine permits significant invasions of children's and families' privacy at home and elsewhere, implicating fundamental constitutional rights without consideration of the severity or credibility of allegations."); Doriane Lambelet Coleman, Storming the Castle to Save the Children: The Ironic costs of a Child Welfare Exception to the Fourth Amendment, 47 Wm. & Mary L. Rev. 413, 417-419 (2005) ("[I]n the name of saving children from the harm that their parents and guardians are thought to pose, states ultimately cause more harm to many more children than they ever help. In 2002, for example, the states conducted approximately 1.8 million investigations concerning the welfare of nearly 3.2 million children. Only about 896,000, or twenty-eight percent, of these children were ultimately found to be victims of abuse or neglect. Seventy-one percent, or roughly 2.3 million children were thus subjected to state mandated "thorough" investigations involving at a minimum interviews, examinations, and/or home visits, in circumstances where the state in the end could not show that the children were unsafe and in need of rescue. Investigating these children is consistent with the states' highly precautionary strategy to remedy the nation's maltreatment problem. However, from the perspective of the investigated child, the process is not so clearly meritorious. Indeed, despite the authorities' best intentions, the process can be harmful in two related ways. First, the investigations undermine the fundamental values of privacy, dignity, personal security, and mobility that are protected by the Fourth Amendment. It is critical in this regard that the Fourth Amendment uniquely has been interpreted to recognize the child's own individual interest in these values, by guarding her right also to be free from unreasonable searches and seizures both inside and outside the family home. Second, ... depending upon the child and the nature of the investigation, the process can cause emotional and psychological damage ranging from temporary discomfort to significant long-term harm." (cleaned up)).

William A. Estrada, Esq., President • Shaun Alexander, Vice President

P.O. Box 1090 • Purcellville, VA 20134 • 540.751.1200 • info@parentalrights.org treating a mere allegation of abuse or neglect as license to ask a court to compel a parent to undergo drug or alcohol testing against his or her will.

Second, H.B. 1737 violates the constitutions of the United States of America and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution provides:

“The right of the People to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no Warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by Oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.”

Federal courts have consistently ruled that a drug or alcohol test is a search under the Fourth Amendment, and therefore is subject to stringent Fourth Amendment protections (see, e.g., Skinner v. Ry. Labor Execs. Ass’n, 489 U.S. 602, 617 (1989); Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757, 767-68 (1966)).

Likewise, Article I, Section 8 of the Pennsylvania Constitution provides:

“The people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers and possessions from unreasonable searches and seizures, and no warrant to search any place or to seize any person or things shall issue without describing them as nearly as may be, nor without probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation subscribed to by the affiant.”

Like the federal courts, Pennsylvania’s courts have consistently ruled that a drug or alcohol test is a search under this provision of the Pennsylvania Constitution, and therefore is subject to stringent constitutional protections, indeed, even higher protections than those afforded under the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution (see, e.g., Theodore v. Del. Valley Sch. Dist., 575 Pa. 321, 344-45, 836 A.2d 76, 89-90 (Pa. 2003)). And Pennsylvania courts have held that child abuse and neglect investigations in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania must comply with the Fourth Amendment and Article I, Section 8 of the Pennsylvania Constitution (see, e.g., In re Petition to Compel Cooperation with Child Abuse Investigation, 875 A.2d 365, 377 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005)).

Third, H.B. 1737 is directly contrary to a recent unanimous decision by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. Last year, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court held in a unanimous decision that “the Agency’s authority to investigate [allegations of child abuse and neglect] does not include the authority to obtain an involuntary urine sample from the subject of the investigation.” (In the Interest of D.R., No. 45 WAP 2019 (Pa. 2020)). The potential impacts of the decision were so threatening to the Constitutional guarantees of parental rights, that the American Civil Liberties Union, the ACLU of Pennsylvania, and the Home School Legal Defense Association jointly filed an amicus curiae brief with the Pennsylvania Supreme Court urging that the Pennsylvania Supreme Court protect parents from being compelled against their will to undergo drug testing as part of an investigation into suspected child abuse or neglect. The amicus curiae brief is attached to this letter.

Fourth, the U.S. Department of Health & Human Services has directly rejected a link between a drug test and investigations of child abuse or neglect: “[a] drug test alone cannot determine the existence or absence of a substance use disorder. In addition, drug tests do not provide sufficient information for substantiating allegations of child abuse or neglect or for making decisions about the disposition of a case (including decisions regarding child removal, family reunification, or termination of parental rights).”<sup>2</sup> It is disconcerting to see the Pennsylvania legislature attempt to compel parents against their will to undergo invasive drug or urine testing, simply because an allegation of abuse or neglect was lodged against them, when the federal agency overseeing substance abuse funding to states and localities rejects such efforts.

In conclusion, in a day and age when anonymous reports of child abuse and neglect are so often levelled against innocent parents, often merely over a grudge between neighbors or family members, it is imperative that the Pennsylvania legislature reject another expansion of the child welfare system over the fundamental right of parents to raise, nurture, and care for their children. On behalf of our thousands of members and supporters across the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, I urge you to reject H.B. 1737.

Thank you for your consideration of the concerns raised in this letter. Please do not hesitate to contact me for any reason via email at will@parentalrights.org, or via phone at 571-246-6792.

Very truly yours,

William A. Estrada, Esq.<sup>3</sup>
President, ParentalRights.org

---

<sup>2</sup> Substance Abuse & Mental Health Servs. Admin., U.S. Dep’t. of Health & Human Servs., Drug Testing in Child Welfare: Practice and Policy Considerations 1 (2010), <https://ncsacw.samhsa.gov/files/drugtestinginchildwelfare.pdf>.

<sup>3</sup> Licensed in California and the District of Columbia.

CC: Senator Jake Corman, Senator Lisa Baker, Senator Patrick M. Browne, Senator Mario M. Scavello, Senator Patrick J. Stefano, Senator John P. Sabatina, Jr., Senator Nikil Saval, Senator Judith L. Schwank, and Senator John T. Yudichak

ATTACHMENT

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF PENNSYLVANIA
WESTERN DISTRICT

---

No. 45 WAP 2019
In the Interest of: D.R., a minor,
Appeal of: Fayette County Children and Youth Services.

No. 46 WAP 2019
In the Interest of: A.R., a minor,
Appeal of: Fayette County Children and Youth Services.

No. 47 WAP 2019
In the Interest of: G.R., a minor,
Appeal of: Fayette County Children and Youth Services.

No. 48 WAP 2019
In the Interest of: R.R., a minor,
Appeal of: Fayette County Children and Youth Services.

No. 49 WAP 2019
In the Interest of: C.R., a minor,
Appeal of: Fayette County Children and Youth Services.

---

BRIEF OF AMICI CURIAE
THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OF PENNSYLVANIA AND HOME SCHOOL LEGAL DEFENSE ASSOCIATION IN SUPPORT OF APPELLEES

---

Sara J. Rose, PA ID 204936
Richard T. Ting, PA ID 200438
American Civil Liberties Union
of Pennsylvania
P.O. Box 23058
Pittsburgh, PA 15222
412-681-7736
srose@aclupa.org
rting@aclupa.org
Counsel for Amici Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE .....	1
SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT .....	4
ARGUMENT .....	6
I.    Drug Testing Parents Intrudes on Strong Privacy Interests Regarding Private Medical Facts and Observation of Excretory Functions.....	7
II.   A Compelled Drug Test Requires Probable Cause to Believe a Parent Used Drugs, Resulting in Child Abuse or Neglect, and That the Drug Test Will Provide Evidence of Child Abuse or Neglect. ....	10
A. Child Welfare Investigations Must Comport with the Fourth Amendment and Article I, § 8. ....	10
B. Drug Testing Will Rarely, If Ever, Provide Evidence of Child Abuse or Neglect. ....	13
CONCLUSION .....	17

TABLE OF CITATIONS

Cases

Commonwealth v. Kohl , 532 Pa. 152 (1992) .....	6
Good v. Dauphin Cnty. Social Servs. for Children &amp; Youth , 891 F.2d 1087 (3d Cir. 1989) .....	10
In re D.R. , 216 A.3d 286 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2019) .....	8, 12
In re Petition to Compel Cooperation with Child Abuse Investigation , 875 A.2d 365 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005) .....	7, 10, 11, 16
Luminella v. Marcocci , 814 A.2d 711 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2002) .....	11, 12
Nat'l Treasury Emps. Union v. Von Raab , 489 U.S. 656 (1989) .....	9
Schmerber v. California , 384 U.S. 757 (1966) .....	16
Skinner v. Ry. Labor Execs. Ass'n , 489 U.S. 602 (1989) .....	passim
Theodore v. Del. Valley Sch. Dist. , 575 Pa. 321 (1992) .....	passim

Other Authorities

Substance Abuse & Mental Health Servs. Admin., U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., Drug Testing in Child Welfare: Practice and Policy Considerations (2010), https://ncsacw.samhsa.gov/files/DrugTestinginChildWelfare.pdf ....	14
---	----

STATEMENT OF INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

American Civil Liberties Union of Pennsylvania

The American Civil Liberties Union (“ACLU”) is a nationwide, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization of over 1.75 million members. Since its founding in 1920, the ACLU has been dedicated to preserving and defending the principles of individual liberty and equality embodied in the Pennsylvania Constitution, the United States Constitution and civil rights laws. The ACLU of Pennsylvania is one of its state affiliates.

The ACLU and ACLU of Pennsylvania have appeared many times as amicus curiae in federal and state courts at all levels, including both civil and criminal proceedings, in cases involving the rights of people to be free from unreasonable searches, including drug tests. The proper resolution of this case is thus a matter of substantial importance to the ACLU and its members.

Home School Legal Defense Association

Home School Legal Defense Association is a national nonprofit organization whose mission is to protect the fundamental constitutional right of parents to direct the education and upbringing of their children.

With over 80,000 member families in fifty states, and almost 3,000 member families in Pennsylvania, HSLDA is the world's largest homeschool advocacy organization.

In the early days of the modern homeschooling movement, we discovered that child-welfare investigators routinely avoid interacting with parents at the beginning of an investigation by going to the child's school or pre-school, as was done in this case. But because homeschooled children are at home when they are at school, child-welfare investigators could not routinely avoid parents. This led to many distressing encounters at the home's front door, often simply because the family homeschooled at a time when it was not as accepted as it is today.

In one of our early cases, Calabretta v. Floyd, 189 F.3d 808 (9th Cir. 1999), the Ninth Circuit held that the nonconsensual entry into the home and subsequent strip search of the children violated the constitutional rights of that homeschooling family. "The government's interest in the welfare of children embraces not only protecting children from physical abuse, but also protecting children's interest in the privacy and dignity of their homes and in the lawfully exercised authority of their parents.” Id. at 820.

From its founding in 1983, HSLDA has assisted thousands of families in protecting these interests during child-welfare investigations, often commenced in response to anonymous or malicious hotline tips that later prove to be unfounded. HSLDA represented the family in In re Petition to Compel Cooperation with Child Abuse Investigation, 875 A.2d 365 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005), which established that the Fourth Amendment and Article I, section 8 apply in full force to child-abuse investigations in Pennsylvania.

In accordance with Pa. R.A.P. 531(b)(2)(i)(ii), no person or entity other than amici or counsel for amici paid in whole or in part for the preparation of this amici curiae brief or authored in whole or in part the amici curiae brief.

SUMMARY OF THE ARGUMENT

This case involves the government’s power to compel a parent to undergo drug testing as part of an investigation into suspected child abuse or neglect. The Superior Court correctly held that there is no statutory authority for a county child welfare agency to petition for a drug test prior to a dependency adjudication. But even if such statutory authority existed, compelling a parent to submit to a drug test would constitute an unreasonable search in violation of the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Article I, § 8 of the Pennsylvania Constitution, unless probable cause existed to believe that the drug test would provide evidence of child abuse or neglect.

In this case, the only allegation involving children was that the father (“Father”) of D.R., A.R., G.R, R.R., and C.R. appeared to be under the influence of some unknown substance in a county office building in the presence of one of his five children, who were between the ages of five and fifteen.<sup>1</sup> That allegation fails to establish probable cause sufficient to compel Father to undergo a drug test. To establish <sup>1</sup> The allegation was made through a report to ChildLine and did not specify which child was with Father or the age of the child. Two other reports to CYS regarding Father did not include allegations regarding any children.

---

probable cause, appellant Fayette County Children and Youth Services (“CYS”) must show that Father’s children were at risk of abuse or neglect; that Father’s alleged drug use put them at risk of abuse or neglect; and that drug-testing Father would provide information helpful to CYC in its investigation. None of those showings were made in this case. Accordingly, even if CYC had statutory authority to require parents to undergo drug tests during child abuse and neglect investigations, which it does not, this Court should affirm the decision of the Superior Court vacating and remanding the trial court’s order requiring Father to provide a urine sample for drug testing as part of a child welfare investigation.

ARGUMENT

“Except in limited circumstances, a search or seizure is not reasonable unless it is accomplished pursuant to a judicial warrant issued upon probable cause.” Commonwealth v. Kohl, 532 Pa. 152, 161 (1992) (citing Skinner v. Ry. Labor Execs. Ass’n, 489 U.S. 602, 619 (1989)). Reasonableness of a search “is judged by balancing its intrusion on the individual’s Fourth Amendment interests against its promotion of legitimate governmental interests.” Skinner, 489 U.S. at 619 (quoting Delaware v. Prouse, 440 U.S. 648, 654 (1979)); see also Theodore v. Del. Valley Sch. Dist., 575 Pa. 321, 341-42 (1992) (applying balancing test to analysis of Pennsylvania Constitution, Article I, § 8).

A drug test is a search subject to the reasonableness requirements of the Fourth Amendment to the United States Constitution and Article I, § 8 of the Pennsylvania Constitution. E.g., Skinner, 489 U.S. at 617; Theodore, 575 Pa. at 344-45. That the search at issue—a urine drug test—was related to a child welfare investigation is of no moment: The Superior Court has previously held that the Fourth Amendment and Article I, § 8 apply to the Child Protective Services Law (“CPSL”) and the regulations written to implement it. In re Petition to Compel

Cooperation with Child Abuse Investigation, 875 A.2d 365, 374-77 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2005). Accordingly, even if the CPSL authorized parental drug-testing as part of an investigation into child abuse or neglect, which it does not, the Fourth Amendment and Article I, § 8 require probable cause to believe that a child is at risk of abuse or neglect based on a parent's alleged drug use and that drug test results will aid CY5 in its investigation before a court can order a parent to undergo a drug test.

I. Drug Testing Parents Intrudes on Strong Privacy Interests Regarding Private Medical Facts and Observation of Excretory Functions.

Blood, breath, or urine drug tests are searches that intrude upon privacy in at least two ways—in collection of the sample and in disclosure of the results. Theodore, 575 Pa. at 338; Skinner, 489 U.S. at 616-17. Chemical analysis of urine can reveal private medical facts, including whether someone is epileptic, pregnant, or diabetic. Skinner, 489 U.S. at 617. The process of collecting a urine sample also implicates privacy interests, as it may include visual or aural monitoring of the act of urination. Id. The United States Supreme Court has explained:

There are few activities in our society more personal or private than the passing of urine. Most people describe it by euphemisms, if they talk about it at all. It is a function traditionally performed without public observation; indeed, its performance in public is generally prohibited by law, as well as social custom.

Id. at 617 (quoting Nat'l Treasury Emps. Union v. Von Raab, 816 F.2d 170, 175 (5th Cir. 1987)).

In this case, CYS sought an “observable” urine screen, which requires the administrator of the drug test to watch the urine exit the penis to ensure the integrity of the sample. See In re D.R., 216 A.3d 286, 289 n.3 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2019). An observable urine screen is particularly intrusive on privacy. See Theodore, 575 Pa. at 345 (finding privacy intrusion of urine collection ameliorated by collection by trained medical personnel in a manner that balances privacy and confidentiality with the accuracy of the tests); Skinner, 489 U.S. at 626 (noting reduced privacy concern for collecting urine sample where sample did not need to be furnished “under the direct observation of a monitor”).

Reports alleging that a parent was under the influence of an unknown substance do not create a reduced expectation of privacy for the parent. Courts have recognized a reduced expectation of privacy with respect to a urine drug test in certain contexts, such as for railroad employees, who participate “in an industry that is regulated pervasively to ensure safety,” Skinner, 489 U.S. at 627-28, federal employees directly involved in drug interdiction, Nat’l Treasury Emps. Union v. Von Raab, 489 U.S. 656, 672 (1989), federal employees required to carry firearms, id., and public school students while in school, e.g., Theodore, 575 Pa. at 345. No similar circumstances exist when a government agency, based on allegations from third parties, investigates private citizens. See Nat’l Treasury Emps. Union, 489 U.S. at 672 (explaining that “[u]nlike most private citizens or government employees in general, employees involved in drug interdiction reasonably should expect effective inquiry into their fitness and probity”).

A private citizen parent’s strong privacy interests with respect to drug testing do not evaporate simply because a third party alleges to CYS that the parent is using drugs. A urine drug test as part of an investigation of alleged child abuse or neglect plainly intrudes on strong privacy interests regarding both private medical facts and observation of excretory functions.<sup>2</sup>

II. A Compelled Drug Test Requires Probable Cause to Believe a Parent Used Drugs, Resulting in Child Abuse or Neglect, and That the Drug Test Will Provide Evidence of Child Abuse or Neglect.

A. Child Welfare Investigations Must Comport with the Fourth Amendment and Article I, § 8.

Child welfare investigations must comport with the probable cause requirements of the Fourth Amendment and Article I, § 8. See, e.g., Good v. Dauphin Cnty. Social Servs. for Children & Youth, 891 F.2d 1087, 1092-95 (3d Cir. 1989) (applying Fourth Amendment to home visit and strip search as part of child abuse investigation); In re Petition to Compel, 875 A.2d at 374-77. In In re Petition to Compel, the Superior Court vacated a trial court order compelling parents to allow a home

---

<sup>2</sup> “The cases decided under Article I, [Section] 8, have recognized a ‘strong notion of privacy, which is greater than that of the Fourth Amendment.’” Theodore, 575 Pa. at 341 (quoting Commonwealth v. Glass, 562 Pa. 187 (2000)) (alteration in original); see also Commonwealth v. Melilli, 521 Pa. 405, 412 (1989). “[A]t the time the Pennsylvania Constitution was drafted in 1776, the issue of searches and seizures unsupported by probable cause was of utmost concern to the constitutional draftsmen.” Commonwealth v. Edmunds, 526 Pa. 374, 394 (1991). Thus, the privacy interests implicated by a compelled drug test are entitled to greater protection under Article I, § 8 than under the Fourth Amendment.

visit by Susquehanna County Services for Children and Youth (“C & Y”) as part of an investigation into a ChildLine report of alleged medical neglect. Id. at 368. The Superior Court held that in order to comport with the Fourth Amendment and Article I, § 8, a compelled home visit requires “probable cause to believe that an act of child abuse or neglect has occurred and evidence relating to such abuse will be found in the home.” Id. at 377. The only relevant fact in that case was a ChildLine referral to C & Y for possible medical neglect, which was insufficient to establish probable cause to justify a home visit. Id. at 378.

Similarly here, to obtain an order compelling a parent to undergo a drug test as part of a child welfare investigation, CYS must establish probable cause to believe not only that an act of child abuse or neglect has occurred, but also that evidence relating to such abuse will be found through a drug test of the parent. See id. at 377.

Although CYS contends that this Court’s decision in Luminella v. Marcocci, 814 A.2d 711 (Pa. Super. Ct. 2002), supports its argument that parents can be compelled to undergo drug testing during child welfare investigations, Luminella involved a private custody dispute, not a child welfare investigation. When private parties petition a court to resolve a dispute, they are subjecting themselves to the court’s jurisdiction. As the Superior Court explained in Luminella, “[t]he civil litigant generally, and the custody dispute litigant in particular, has a drastically reduced expectation of privacy.” Id. at 722. A child custody litigant can “reasonably expect that the very core of her privacy interests—her home life and child rearing practices—would be the central focus of the hearing.” Id. at 723. By contrast, a parent at the center of a child welfare investigation has not sought the assistance of the court in resolving a child custody dispute, but has instead been involuntarily made the target of a government investigation. See In re D.R., 216 A.3d at 296 (“[A] contested custody action between parents (or statutorily authorized family members) does not involve the same type of governmental intrusion as a CYS Agency’s investigation of child abuse or neglect, either in degree or in kind.”). Accordingly, parents do not have a reduced expectation of privacy simply because they are the subjects of a child welfare investigation.<sup>3</sup>

---

<sup>3</sup> In citing Luminella, CYS appears to be arguing for a “special needs” exception to the Fourth Amendment for parents accused of child abuse or neglect. See CYS Br. at 18-20. Although “a search unsupported by probable cause may be permissible . . . where ‘special needs’ beyond those associated with law enforcement make this

B. Drug Testing Will Rarely, If Ever, Provide Evidence of Child Abuse or Neglect.

It is unlikely that an agency would ever be able to establish probable cause that evidence relating to child abuse or neglect will be found through a drug test of a parent because drug test results will rarely constitute evidence of child abuse or neglect. The United States Department of Health and Human Services has explained:

A drug test alone cannot determine the existence or absence of a substance use disorder. In addition, drug tests do not provide sufficient information for substantiating allegations of child abuse or neglect or for making decisions about the disposition of a case (including decisions regarding child removal, family reunification, or termination of parental rights).

---

requirement impractical,” Theodore, 575 Pa. at 335; see also Skinner, 489 U.S. at 619, there is no basis for applying this exception to parents accused of child abuse or neglect. Determining whether special needs excuse the requirement for a warrant supported by probable cause requires balancing the intrusion on the individual’s privacy interest against the promotion of a legitimate government interest. See Theodore, 575 Pa. at 341-42; Skinner, 489 U.S. at 619. Here, a urine drug test intrudes upon strong privacy interests regarding private medical facts and observation of excretory functions. See supra, Part I. A urine drug test also would be ineffective in providing CYS with evidence helpful for its child abuse or neglect investigation. See infra, Part II.B. Because strong privacy interests outweigh limited governmental interests here, special needs do not justify a urine drug test without probable cause.

Substance Abuse & Mental Health Servs. Admin., U.S. Dep't of Health & Human Servs., Drug Testing in Child Welfare: Practice and Policy Considerations 1 (2010), <https://ncsacw.samhsa.gov/files/DrugTestinginChildWelfare.pdf>.

A drug test also would not provide evidence of whether a parent was under the influence of a drug during a previously reported incident. “Drug test results indicate only that the drug or its metabolite is present at or above the established concentration cutoff level in the test specimen.” Id. Nor would a drug test reveal whether a parent abuses or neglects his children. Simply using an illicit substance, without more, does not constitute child abuse or neglect. Indeed, there is “no definitive research-driven or evidence-based method exists to determine whether drug use [] contribut[es] to child maltreatment.” Id. at 19. Accordingly, compelling a parent to submit to a drug test following an allegation that he was under the influence of an unknown substance would not advance CYS’s interest of determining whether there is substantial evidence that the parent has abused or neglected his child.

This case highlights the unreasonableness of a urine drug test as part of a child abuse investigation. Here, none of the reports to CYS alleged that any of Father's children had been abused or neglected. Nor did the reports allege any actual knowledge of illegal drug use by Father, much less illegal drug use that was causing harm to his children. (R. 78a-79a). Instead, one report stated Father "appeared to be impaired/under the influence of an unknown substance," (R. 79a), one report stated that Father "may be taking something he shouldn't," (R. 63a), and one report stated Father appeared "completely out of it," (R. 46a-R. 47a, R. 60a-R. 61a). Only the first report involved any of Father's children and it did not specify a particular child or the child's age. See CYS Br. at 14. CYS interviewed all five of Father's children and found no evidence of child abuse or neglect. (R. 68a-R. 69a). The result of a drug test of Father's urine, especially coming many months after the initial allegations, would not alter CYS's apparent conclusion that there was no evidence of child abuse or neglect.

Despite its reliance on Luminella, CYS concedes that a compelled urine test requires "probable cause." CYS Br. at 22. Although CYS contends that probable cause existed in this case, that argument fails for at least two reasons. First, a report alleging that a parent appeared to be under the influence of an unknown substance is insufficient to establish probable cause that the parent was under the influence of an unknown substance, much less that the parent has abused or neglected his children. See In re Petition to Compel, 875 A.2d at 377-78 (finding ChildLine referral for alleged medical neglect insufficient to establish “probable cause to believe that an act of child abuse or neglect has occurred and evidence relating to such abuse will be found in the home”). Second, CYS applies the wrong standard for what probable cause is required for compelling a drug test in a child welfare investigation. CYS seems to argue that probable cause to believe a parent was under the influence of an unknown substance at a prior time is sufficient. See CYS Br. at 22. But as explained above, a compelled drug test must be supported by probable cause to believe the parent was under the influence of a drug, resulting in child abuse or neglect, and that the drug test would provide evidence of that child abuse or neglect. See, e.g., Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757, 769-70 (1966) (“The interests in human dignity and privacy which the Fourth Amendment protects forbid any such intrusions [beyond the body’s surface] on the mere chance that desired evidence might be obtained.”); In re Petition to Compel, 875 A.2d at 377. Such circumstances do not arise from reports that a parent allegedly appeared to be under the influence of an unknown substance at a prior time, especially when the parent's children were interviewed and there is no evidence that the children had been abused or neglected.

CONCLUSION

For the aforementioned reasons, amici curiae respectfully urge this Court to affirm the decision of the Superior Court vacating and remanding the trial court's order requiring Father-Appellee to provide a urine sample for drug testing as part of a child welfare investigation.

Respectfully Submitted,

/s/ Richard T. Ting

Sara J. Rose, PA ID 204936
Richard T. Ting, PA ID 200438
American Civil Liberties Union
of Pennsylvania
P.O. Box 23058
Pittsburgh, PA 15222
412-681-7736
srose@aclupa.org
rting@aclupa.org

Counsel for Amici Curiae

Dated: December 23, 2019

CERTIFICATION OF WORD COUNT

I hereby certify that this brief contains 3,347 words, as determined by the word-count feature of Microsoft Word, the word-processing program used to prepare this brief.

Dated: December 23, 2019

/s/ Richard T. Ting

Richard T. Ting

CERTIFICATE OF COMPLIANCE WITH Pa.R.A.P. 127

I hereby certify, pursuant to Pa.R.A.P. 127, that this filing complies with the provisions of the Case Records Public Access Policy of the Unified Judicial System of Pennsylvania that require filing confidential information and documents differently than non-confidential information and documents.

Dated: December 23, 2019

/s/ Richard T. Ting
Richard T. Ting

CERTIFICATE OF SERVICE

I hereby certify that I caused true and correct copies of the foregoing Brief of Amici Curiae to be served upon the persons indicated below by PACFile and First Class Mail, which service satisfies the requirements of Pennsylvania Rule of Appellate Procedure 121:

Anthony S. Dedola, Jr., Esq.
51 E. South St.
Uniontown, PA 15401
724-438-1555
Counsel for Appellant Fayette County Children & Youth Services

David James Russo, Esq.
192 W. High St.
Waynesburg, PA 15370
724-627-9466
Counsel for Appellees D.R., A.R., G.R, R.R., C.C.

Dated: December 23, 2019

/s/ Richard T. Ting
Sara J. Rose, PA ID 204936
Richard T. Ting, PA ID 200438
American Civil Liberties Union
of Pennsylvania
P.O. Box 23058
Pittsburgh, PA 15222
412-681-7736
srose@aclupa.org
rting@aclupa.org
Counsel for Amici Curiae